GOSPEL REFLECTION

King Solomon is praised in the first reading at Mass today for choosing something that will last, namely, wisdom, rather than fleeting things or earthly goods. Solomon stands as a model in the Hebrew Scriptures of “being on the right track.” Solomon is described as knowing what is really needed for life’s journey: an understanding heart, which God bestows. That doesn’t negate the importance of the everyday choices we make in response to God’s action. That is doing good to others, rendering worship to the God of heaven and earth, setting one’s heart on spiritual rather than material riches. As Christians we recognize Jesus as the bringer of the fullness of life, eternal life in heaven, of which even King Solomon did have knowledge. Jesus offers to those who are willing to “prefer nothing whatever to Christ.” The heart of the Christian message is the Good News that God has stooped down to us in order to raise us up to Him. No one is forced to accept this great gift, of course; otherwise, it would not be a gift, but an imposition. To those who accept the gift there is a fundamental approach, the realization everything as “being on loan,” from the God who made us.
